Are you still officially certified to audit against the OHSAS 18001 Standard?

Believe it or not, the three-year 'grace period' for auditors to refresh their Health and Safety qualification (as required by the replacement Standard, ISO 45001:2018) ended in 2021!

Since no organisation is registered against the obsolete OHSAS 18001, nowadays, it means auditors not officially trained to ISO 45001 risk their audits being rejected during their employer's Certification audits.

The good news is, it's still possible to rejuvenate your defunct OHSAS 18001 Auditor certificate, thanks to our personal tuition service; as well as for groups of 3 or more, in-house or online.

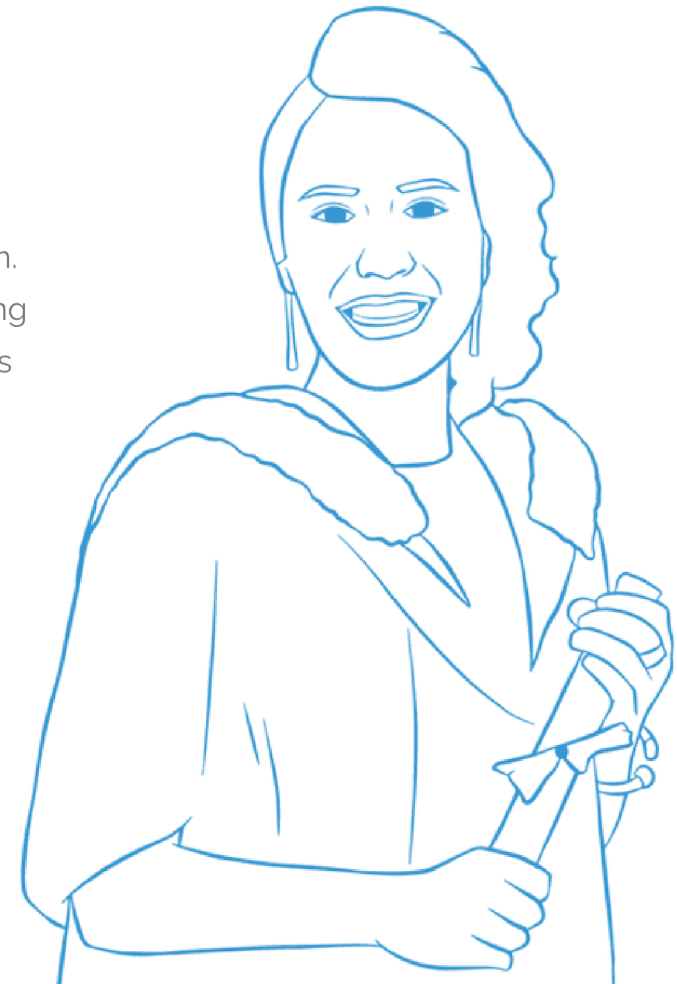

Should I update or completely re-train?

ISO 45001 took over from the old OHSAS 18001:2007 British Standard, but auditors previously trained to 18001 do not have to re-take an entire Internal or Lead Auditor course to stay 'valid' - you can update your qualification by attending this single-day SQMC module.

Our Transition module will be beneficial for anyone maintaining an ISO 45001-based Safety Management System. Managers affected by an 'SMS' should also consider attending the course, to gain a clear understanding of how the changes and additional clauses will impact their role.

Freelance consultants and trainers will also want to attend, and the course is worth 7 Continuing Professional Development (CPD) points in the Chartered Quality Institute.

Please note, however, that auditors who are personally registered with IRCA may require to undertake a two-day course, not offered by SQMC, to maintain their registered status.

What will I learn?

This ISO 45001 Transition course focuses predominantly on the 'nuts and bolts' of the latest Health and Safety Standard. The most notable issues we'll cover during your tuition are:

- The major additional clause governing the Management of Risk.
- The other major additional clause focusing on the Context of an Organisation.
- An explanation of "Annex SL" - the inspired framework on which all Management Systems Standards are being built.

Participants will receive a complimentary copy of ISO 45001 (which has a non-member value of £210, if purchased from the British Standards Institute), and those who successfully complete SQMC's continuous assessment exercises throughout the module will be awarded a globally-recognised Certificate of Achievement.
