Are you still officially certified to audit against the 2008 or 2000 versions?

Quality Auditors who trained to older issues of ISO 9001 had a grace period of three years to update their qualification (as required by the replacement Standard, ISO 9001:2015). However, this had to be completed by 2018.

Since no organisation is legitimately registered against the obsolete ISO 9001:2008, nowadays, auditors who haven't stayed up-to-date risk their audits being rejected during their employer's Certification audits.

The good news is, it's still possible to rejuvenate your defunct Auditor certificate, thanks to our personal tuition service; as well as for groups of 3 or more, in-house or online.

Should I update or completely re-train?

ISO 9001:2015 has completely taken over from the old ISO 9001:2008, but auditors previously trained to older versions do not have to re-take an entire Internal or Lead Auditor course to stay 'valid' - you can update your qualification through this single-day, SQMC module.

Our ISO 9001 Transition training will be beneficial for anyone maintaining Quality Management System (QMS). Managers affected by a QMS should also consider attending the course, to gain a clear understanding of how the changes and additional clauses will impact their role.

Freelance consultants and trainers will also want to attend, and the course is worth 7 Continuing Professional Development (CPD) points in the Chartered Quality Institute.

Please note, however, that auditors who are personally registered with IRCA may require to undertake a two-day course, not offered by SQMC, to maintain their registered status.

What will I learn?

This ISO 9001 Transition course focuses predominantly on the 'nuts and bolts' of the latest QMS Standard. The most notable issues we'll cover during your tuition are:

- The major additional clause governing the Management of Risk.
- The other major additional clause focusing on the Context of an Organisation.
- An explanation of "Annex SL" - the inspired framework on which all Management Systems Standards are being built.

Participants will receive a complimentary copy of ISO 9001 (which has a non-member value of £160, if purchased from the British Standards Institute), and those who successfully complete SQMC's continuous assessment exercises throughout the module will be awarded a globally-recognised Certificate of Achievement.
